To whom it may concern,

I've been teaching English in Japan for over 20 years

During my time teaching English in Japan, I have come across varying ages and proficiencies . And within that field I have taught students from kindergarten to business English

I have found each category unique and challenging. And teaching company employees is no exception. I have considerable experience teaching children.

My top 5 characteristics are ,

1/ Patience

2/ Creativity

3/ Outgoing personality

4/ Enthusiasm

5/ Enjoyment

Children are active learners who enjoy games and songs . With children, learning English is a means of various activities with rules. I find teaching children rewarding and challenging, as they are fun and happy people.

Adults on the other hand are intense learners with goals to reach . Many maybe studying for specific reasons. They maybe studying for a promotion, or the opportunity to work abroad, or even just to travel . What ever the reason, be it for work or pleasure, English is an essential form of communication.

I have considerable experience teaching business English. All my students are business minded, and are either regular company employees who need English skills to communicate in an English environment for work reasons, or are brushing up their English skills to enable themselves to obtain a certain position in the company, which requires business English.

With my wealth of experience as a teacher I enjoy sharing my ideas in school management.

I consider myself to be an extremely versatile English teacher, and with my skills I am able to give quality lessons
